STILL GUESSING.

With the passing of the polio epidemic, or infantile paralysis epidemic, the war of words between the diagnosticians continues with unabated fury. It is now asserted that the disease is subacute, either as poliomyelitis or polio, both designations being based on inaccurate assumptions. American Medicine declares that it is not a contact disease, which it considers proved by the fact that the mortality in rural sections suggests congested population plays little part. In several instances single cases were discovered in orphan asylums with-

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat, which clogs kidneys, then back hurts and bladder bothers you.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

out the development of any secondary case. This point was brought out during the height of the epidemic by the discovery that seldom was there more than one case in a family of several children. The conclusion is therefore offered that the alarm regarding the opening of schools was largely unfounded, but it was a case where no chances could be taken. Subsequent study of the figures showed that in New York only 2.7 per cent of the children affected were over 10 years, while 81 per cent were under school age.

These findings are of course negative knowledge. They suggest that some of the things presumed about the disease are not so. But so far as positive knowledge is concerned the medical profession is still guessing regarding the probable cause of the affliction. Perhaps when the full information gleaned during the recent epidemic is analyzed the process of elimination may narrow the possibilities to a group in which research may discover the true origin and the preventive.

AN UNPROFIT.

AELE SCRAMBLE.

A special committee which has been inquiring into athletics at Yale confesses its alarm at the trend of intercollegiate sport. Especially it deplors the increasing cost of coaching by professionals, which, in turn, the committee fears, threatens to convert intercollegiate contests into a wild and unprofitable scramble to raise the funds demanded. Already there are evidences of this commercialization of collegiate sport, which is making the selling of tickets the most important feature. Desirable athletes are offered inducements, and, if not checked, intercollegiate contests will be reduced to a tawdry speculation. So strongly does this Yale committee feel about the matter that it proposes the elimination of intercollegiate athletics unless Yale can develop for champions from her own resources and without artificial stimulus.

This is one side of it. Another is that such specialization in intercollegiate contests develops a limited number, while the great bulk of the student body take their athletics by proxy. Athletics, as part of collegiate experience, should be as general as may be, not restricted to a select few. The physical benefits should be as widely diffused as possible. But, as conducted, all the athletic interest is centered in the participants in the intercollegiate contests, hence the extravagantly paid coaching staff and the extraordinary expenses with the resultant scramble for returns at the gate.

THINGS THAT NEVER HAPPEN

By GENE BYRNES

A STORY YOU CAN BEGIN AT ANY TIME.

Her Side—and His

HOW CORA AND DAVID TEMPLE SOLVED THEIR MARITAL PROBLEMS.

By ZOE BECKLEY.

THE HOME THAT FACED BOTH WAYS.

So again Cora Temple started out to find that ideal home. This time she had more requirements than ever to fulfill. It must be a compromise. Cora smiled as she realized how all married life seemed to be a compromise; just one compromise after another. But now she saw her husband's side of it and was more than willing to be, as he had put it, his partner.

"But if I am to be his partner in his work as a tenement commissioner and help him get at the true necessities of a home, then he must help me in my work; help me keep our home smooth running and comfortable for us, as well as a sort of social center for those who have need of it and will profit by its example."

"I'm going to look for a house that faces both ways," smiled Cora to herself as she started on her second quest. "It must be on the dividing line between the tenement people David is working for and the quieter, more attractive part of town where a true home can flourish. It must be accessible to all, friendly to all. It must smile hospitably both to the poor and to the rich."

"I think it must be in an old-fashioned neighborhood," she decided.

equipping a mental eye at certain brick-housed old blocks she knew of down in the neighborhood of Washington Square. "I'll try anyhow."

Of course it was no easy matter. Cora recalled how she used to think that if only she could afford $50 or $60 a month rent she could find "exactly what she wanted." And now, when she could pay three times that, it seemed just as hard as ever to find the "perfect" home. She found it at last, however—a sort of compromise between what she wanted and what she could get.

It stood on a quiet street "way down town" in one of the blocks running west from Fifth avenue, of mellow red brick, wide fronted and homey looking, with broad, arched windows on which merrily danced the sun. And there was—oh, wonders of wonders—a backyard with infinite possibilities, thought Cora with a thrill.

This time David was delighted. Together they went over it, planning "this room for yours," "this for mine"—no, you better take the larger one. I can do quiet well with this little one with the alcove; and "Oh, won't this make a working office, with a study off from it; and what about this wall for the piano and the couch here and—"

Yes, this time there was perfect

Vegetarian Dishes—No. 72

Even those who are not avowed vegetarians might enjoy passing over a meat dinner once in a while for a meal composed strictly of vegetables. The preparation of a meal like this is a particularly difficult matter.

Bean Cutlets.—The bean has supplied any amount of amusement to those who are forced to the quick-lunch counters for their noonday repast; though it has been the butt of many a joke, the bean contains a large quantity of nourishment in view of which I have placed it first in this installment on vegetarian dishes.

Soak one quarter pound of dried beans in water for twenty-four hours. Then boil for several hours till quite tender, drain them, preserving the liquor, and chop them very fine. Blend two tablespoonfuls of hard and one tablespoonful of flour in a saucepan over the fire and add bean liquor. Then add the beans, salt and pepper to taste, and the yolks of two eggs. Turn out on a dish and set aside until cold. Then cut with a cutlet-cutter or shape with a knife. Dip in the beaten whites of eggs, then in some fine bread crumbs; repeat a second time and fry. Serve on a hot platter decorated with hot cooked mixed vegetables. The above mixture will be sufficient for eight cutlets.

Vegetable Pie.—This dish is about the most popular for the vegetarian diet. Although I prefer a little meat with my meals, there are times that a big dish of vegetable pie proves very satisfying.

Devised Bananas.—The art of devising has been used most exclusively with crabs, oysters and the like; but now the banana must come in for its share. I prepared this dish the other evening for a number of my friends, and they spoke so highly of it that I think it expedient to incorporate it in this article.

The art of devising a banana is accomplished in the following manner: Slice eight bananas and mix with one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of chopped pickles, a few grains of red pepper. Put all in two tablespoonfuls of butter and cook for four minutes and serve.

Peel and slice six potatoes and partly boil them. Then prepare one parsnip, two carrots, one-half head of celery and two onions, and cook them all for fifteen minutes.

Grease a large fireproof dish and place all vegetables in layers with one teaspoonful of powdered herbs, one quarter cupful of melted butter, and salt and pepper to taste. Pour in sufficient white vegetable stock to cover, and then add a thin layer of sliced potatoes and bake in a moderate oven for one and one-half hours. This will be sufficient for one good sized savory pie.

agreement. And, to her own surprise, Cora felt no yearnings for the modern uptown apartment. There is something delightful to contemplate, after all, in your own roof-tree and your own front door.

"It's going to be the truest home a fellow ever had," said David softly, with his arm around his helpmate's shoulder. "It's the home I have dreamed of all my life, dear, without knowing it. For it isn't going to be just a selfish, elegant place for you and me and Little It to be comfortable in. It will be more—a place where other people can come when they need rest and peace and light and warmth and sympathy and knowledge."

"It's going to be a world in itself—a haven and a model combined. But," he added earnestly, "it is to be our refuge, too, my girl. Everything has its proper proportion. You shan't be intruded upon ever."

"I guess it's right this time, Davy," whispered Cora. "It's the home that faces both ways."

STORIES OF NEW YORK

New York—New York has 1,000 street fakery outside of the regular peddlers. The king pin of them all is H. H. Knight, the trousers' stretcherman, who averages $10 a day at his business. He uses a pair of trousers to demonstrate with the skill of a conjurer. Knight can set his stage draw his crowd and rake in his quarters and disappear before the arrival of a rapidly approaching cop—all within from five to seven minutes. There is an aristocracy of the New York novelty peddlers. The creme de la creme consists of a very exclusive circle of 15 men. A hundred second grade sidewalk hawkers, pushing these 15 hard for a place in the selling sun, but until they prove their ability to sell roller skates to cripples or opera glasses to blind men, they must remain in Class B. The third graders embrace about 200 who are little more than intermittent fakery.

"As to profits," said Knight, talking of his trade, "all depends on the day and the hour. Saturdays, Mondays and Fridays are the best days, because they are pay-days. Some days I run things up to $10. You got to make 'em believe they need what you have for sale. I look them straight in the eyes, and I shoot my talk so that it makes a hit. We are generally licensed, paying $2 for the right to sell, but the police chase us. They say that while we have a right to sell we have no right to collect a crowd. Yet the only way of selling our wares is by gathering the pack about us. We carry a 'peep-ho' the man on the lookout for us. He gives us the signal when the cop is getting to close. We shift, temporarily. Yes, sometimes the 'peep-ho' acts as a capper."

Helping the Unfortunate

Gifts from Andrew Carnegie and other wealthy persons will enable the police department to re-establish at headquarters soon the psychological laboratory for the examination of criminals believed to be mentally defective. The laboratory was discontinued last year owing to lack of funds, but Police Commissioner Woods announced that private subscriptions have been sufficient to warrant the resumption of the work. The laboratory has saved many persons from going to prison by discovery that they suffered from mental illness rather than a crooked streak. By methods of quizzing and observation, the latter of various lengths of time, the status of a malefactor can generally be determined, an experienced physician can turn the errand one into the straight and narrow path. Those in charge say that great satisfaction comes to them by hearing verbally or by letter of the gratitude of the ones who have been rescued from lives of crime.

Ones, Twos and Fives Scare

There's a scarcity of $1, $2 and $5 bills in this city. Everybody coming from the west is flashing bills of big denomination on the hotels and tradespeople until the latter have exhausted their small bills for exchange. As a result, there has been a great scurrying in quest of small bills, but they are not to be had. J. P. Thiel, assistant treasurer of the sub-treasury explains the shortage as follows: "Under the law silver certificates can be only issued against free and unpledged silver dollars. At present the supply of ones, twos and fives available in exchange for national bank notes, gold certificates and United States notes is limited, but every ef-

WHAT'S THE REASON?

Many Guthrie People in Poor Health Without Knowing the Cause.

There are scores of people who drag out a miserable existence without realizing the cause of their suffering. You can use no more highly recommended remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills—endorsed by people all over the country and by your neighbors in Guthrie.

Mrs. J. E. Riley, 421 S. First St., Guthrie, says: "I had a severe attack of kidney trouble. I suffered everything with backache and weak kidneys. ## Popular Spot in Gotham

One of the most popular places in New York at present is the Shakespeare Garden in Central Park, but strange to say, there is talk of abandoning it. No good reason could be given for the contemplated move, as thousands are attracted to it weekly. It is one of the loveliest things in the city, and whoever has once seen it will insist upon its being kept in existence. The cost is $1,500 a year, the nearest trifle in comparison with the pleasure which it affords. On a Sunday it is full of people, all moved by its beauty. The community spirit is immediately developed among the lovers of gardens who frequent this wonderful spot. Everybody speaks to all he meets and to the gentle gardener in charge, and one comes away with the feeling that all is not yet to be despaired of in this troublous world.

HOW CATARRH IS CONTRACTED

Others are sometimes so thoughtless as to neglect the colds which their children contract. The inflammation of the mucous membrane, at first acute, becomes chronic and the child has chronic catarrh, a disease that is seldom cured and that may prove a life's burden. Many persons who have this loathsome disease will remember having had frequent colds at the time it was contracted. A little forethought, a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy judiciously used, and all this trouble might have been avoided. Obtainable everywhere.

DADDY'S EVENING

CLIMBING PERCH.

"Did you ever hear of a Fish taking a trip on Land?"

"Never!" cried both Children. "How could any Fish breathe out of Water?"

"Yesterday," continued Daddy, "I went to an Aquarium—which, as I've told you before, is a Home for Fishes—just as a Zoo is a Home for Animals. There I saw all sorts of wonderful Fishes—the Butterfly Fish, all kinds of Gold Fish, and still more interesting were some Fish that had been brought from far, far away, called the Guppi Fish. They build Nests of air bubbles which float on top of the Water. They think they are the best Home Builders in the World—and when I tried to tell them about Birds and the Nests they build out of straw and string and sticks, they dopped about and seemed very angry."

"Come Around Me, Children."

"But it is the Climbing Perch Family I am going to tell you about this evening. They were all there in the Aquarium, but they had had many adventures before they came to this Land, or this Water!"

"Far, far away in Africa they lived in a River, and were a very happy Family. But one day the River seemed to be drying up so fast that they couldn't find enough Water to live in. They had noticed it getting worse and worse every day for some time, and they had been hoping for Rain. But this day it was so bad that they knew something would have to be done."

"Well, even if the River dries up, it won't bother us," said Granddaddy Climbing Perch, "not in the very least. And he gave a huge spatter-spatter with his Tail."

"All the other Fishes looked very much worried and their Fins trembled with fear."

"Why, Granddaddy Climbing Perch," said the old Mother Climbing Perch, "do you want all the Children to die?"

"I should say not!" replied Granddaddy Climbing Perch angrily. "The very idea of your saying such a thing. I am surprised—yes, surprised, and very much annoyed." Granddaddy Climbing Perch's Fins wiggled with temper.

"I'm sorry," said old Mother Climbing Perch meekly, "but I didn't just understand what you said such a thing for, and why you don't seem to be worried that the River is drying up. You always used to love the Children and tell them stories."

"I do still love them, and I shall tell them a true story now of an adventure which will happen to us, some around me, Children!" And Granddaddy Climbing Perch flopped his tail very hard.

"All the Fishes swam over by Granddaddy Climbing Perch and looked at him out of their queer, shiny eyes."

"Now, Children," he began, "Years and years and years ago, our great, great-grandfathers were caught just like this in a River which had dried up. They decided that the only thing for them to do was to try to make up their minds to die, when the Fairy Queen happened along."

"I will name you the Climbing Perch," she said, "and you will be able to go from Pond to Pond in the dry seasons—and live while you are traveling around here for your Family unless you can get from one Pond or River to another—so from now on you will be called the Climbing Perch and you will be able to Travel on Land. See if it is not so?" She waved her Wand and disappeared—and sure enough all the Family Climbed out of the River—which was dry—and with their Gills, which are like Saws, they scrambled to the next Pond, where there was Water. We will do the same."

"All the Climbing Perch Family now knew the meaning of their Family name, and off they started, led by Granddaddy Climbing Perch. They got to the next Pond where there was water—but they hadn't been there for more than a week when that Pond dried up, too, and they had to be off again."

"Would you believe it—but they had to change Ponds five times before they could stay and make a real home! And they are the ones I saw today. Of all the Fishes in the Aquarium they are the proudest because they had had such traveled lives—and they are very happy. Then, too, after all their hard work, they are glad to be in a big Tank which looks as if it would never go dry!"
